May is Foster Care Awareness Month!

Did you know... CPS workers are very limited in the ways they can speak up for foster children.

Foster parents don't often get a say in court. So who speaks up for the best interest of the children? CASA (Court Appointed Special Advocates) Volunteers do! They are trained community volunteers, appointed by a district judge, to represent the best interests of abused and neglected children in court. You need no prior training to be a CASA volunteer. CASA workers can have tremendous impact in the outcome of cases, and the trajectory of children's futures.
